Debris removal

Downed trees not taken care of by their owners will be gathered from county roads to be used for firewood at area parks, according to Lincoln County Public Works Director Jim Buisman. Also, north county residents are encouraged to bring their debris to the North Lincoln Sanitary Service's Schooner Creek Transfer Station through Dec. 15 to be recycled at no cost. Proof of address is necessary. Other solid waste will be charged at $14 per cubic yard, according to a press release. The hours of operation are 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Lincoln County Emergency Services Management Director Jim Hawley said cities are to come up with preliminary damage estimates and submit them to him Monday. He said these would be submitted to Oregon Emergency Management in Salem to give to the governor. He added that he and Commissioner Terry Thompson participated in a conference call with President George W. Bush Wednesday, informing him of the damage in the area.

In other storm news:

Without power and most likely not concerned with downed trees, the homeless did not have a shelter they could turn to, barring the Community Center in Lincoln City. Commissioner Bill Hall said that the plan he helped to create is to come up with a solution in the future.

A wastewater pump went down in Lincoln City and was spilling into Devils Lake. Paul Robertson, Devils Lake Water Improvement District manager, said no person or dog should drink or play in the water for seven days following the time when power is restored. He said the spillage creates a bacteria issue in the water that could cause stomach distress.

A patch of East Devils Lake Road that was raised by the county's road department has stopped water from traveling across the road. Although there was still some water close to the edge lines, Buisman said the temporary improvement did well under this week's extreme conditions.
