from the website:

In response to the situation, Gemawan distributed firefighting equipment and logistical supplies to volunteers from the West Kalimantan Muhammadiyah Disaster Management Center (MDMC) on Tuesday evening, September 1, 2026.

The assistance included water pumps, fire hoses, boots, protective goggles, helmets, gloves, bottled drinking water, and other essential logistical supplies.

The assistance is part of efforts to strengthen volunteers' capacity to respond to fires more quickly, particularly when incidents require immediate intervention.

Founded in 2008, Yayasan Inisiasi Alam Rehabilitasi Indonesia (YIARI) is a nonprofit organization that employs a holistic approach to primate and habitat conservation in Indonesia.

We focus on protecting ecosystems and wildlife by understanding local concerns and aspirations and supporting local actors to shift from extractive economic models to regenerative ones. Sustainable livelihoods initiatives, agricultural support, capital provision, education, skills-programmes, habitat protection, and public health support are some of our preferred tools.
Our activities include rescue, rehabilitation, release, and post-release monitoring programs to ensure that primates can return to live freely in their natural habitats. By combining efforts in natural habitat protection, local community development, and health programs, we strive to create a harmonious ecosystem between humans and nature.

In collaboration with local communities, the Government of Indonesia, civil society and our generous donors, we are committed to preserving biodiversity for the well-being of future generations.

from the website:

In the heart of Borneo, a remarkable group of women are leading the fight to protect one of the most biodiverse regions on the planet. The Power of Mama is the first-ever female firefighting team in Borneo.

The Power of Mama are local women taking a stand against devastating forest fires that threaten their homes, their health, and the critically endangered orangutans that share their land.

These brave women patrol fire–prone areas, extinguishing fires and educating their communities on sustainable land management. They are transforming not only the landscape but also their own lives —breaking gender stereotypes and becoming powerful role models.

Over 130 women have joined The Power of Mama to become fire fighters and ambassadors for wildlife and forest protection in West Borneo.

Summary of work:

he August and September reports cited here document fires affecting parts of Kalimantan, the Indonesian portion of Borneo. They describe a response that spans firefighting, wildlife protection and support for communities living with smoke. Different places face different conditions: an incident in Ketapang should not be treated as a statement about every forest or rehabilitation centre on the island.

On 7 September, Indonesia's disaster–management agency, BNPB, reported continuing coordination across six priority provinces, including West, Central and South Kalimantan. The other provinces are on Sumatra. Its totals therefore should not be relabelled as a Kalimantan–only figure. The agency also emphasised that smoke, visibility and air quality change with fire activity, rain and wind.
