Volunteer center going to half–days

By KATY YEISER
Staff writer – dailyjournal.net (Johnson County)

July 4, 2008

Five out–of–state disaster relief experts have come and gone from the county.

They drop in for days or weeks at a time, helping workers at the county's relief center coordinate volunteers or assess damage.

The remaining two experts left Thursday, and the flood relief efforts are now in the county's hands.

Their departure is a sign of where the county is in the recovery process, said Jann Johnson, supervisor for the flood relief volunteer center.

The center will be open only for half–days next week and close the week after, Johnson said.

"We're in a lull where most people have got their homes cleaned and are waiting for them to dry out," she said.

About 700 volunteers registered at the volunteer center for flood relief at Franklin College and visited 346 sites across the county.

They delivered food and cleaning supplies as well as helped flood victims with their damaged homes.

But only a few people are left to clean out their homes and not as many volunteers are being used on a daily bases, Johnson said.

For example, she said, about 30 people helped clean homes and deliver food and supplies to those who didn't have transportation in the middle of the week.

Because of the declining need for relief efforts, the center is in the process of closing down, Johnson said.

When people need to start rebuilding, reopening the center to coordinate skilled volunteers for repair work such as painting or putting up drywall will be up to the newly formed county recovery committee, she said.

The long–term committee will be formed of school, government, community, church, business and other leaders to focus on specific tasks, such as fundraising, education and construction.

The two experts brought into the county agreed that the county was ready to move on to the long–term recovery stage.

Don Corbishley of Rhode Island and Doris Peadilla of California spent their final night in the county helping members of Mount Auburn United Methodist Church pass out cleaning supplies and food to about 65 flood victims in Friendly Village trailer park in the Center Grove area.

Peadilla arrived in the county Monday and was supposed to stay until next week but didn't need to stay any longer because of the declining need for volunteers. She organized volunteers and sent them to different areas in the county.

Both said the community's effort to rid most of the debris, gut and clean homes and coordinate volunteers was one of the most efficient they have seen after a natural disaster.

"When I came two weeks ago, they didn't know where to start," said Corbishley, who is the interim disaster services program manager at the Volunteer Center of Rhode Island.

Corbishley assessed damaged homes in Amity, Franklin, Edinburgh and Prince's Lakes and told people what to do with their repairs.

Now most of the debris is gone, and neighbors have helped each other prepare their homes for repairs, Corbishley said.

Peadilla came Monday thinking she would see debris still littering streets and sidewalks.

"I was impressed to see things were cleaned up," Peadilla said. "I think the county is ready to move forward."

The public health emergency response director at the Volunteer Center of Los Angeles did relief efforts for the wildfires in northern California last year and this year and said the county's zoning technique was something she will try and incorporate at her center.

The United Way divided the county's flood damage into eight sectors and organized civic and church groups in certain areas.

"It gave each community a point of contact. It kept that community feel going because it was the same person in their area helping them," Peadilla said.

She said although the county's was done on a much smaller scale, the idea could be put in action in a city like Los Angeles.

During the experts' stay, county volunteers and workers were able to develop manuals and an understanding of how to respond to disasters, Johnson said.

The consultants learned, too, Corbishley said. He has been with the American Red Cross for five years and has studied how to handle natural disasters, but all of the bookwork went out the window when he arrived.

He didn't truly learn how to assess the damage a flood can do to an area until he was out talking with the victims and seeing their damage in person.

"I've learned more here in two weeks than I have learned in my five years at the Red Cross," Corbishley said.

POSES PROBLEMS FOR PEOPLE AND ANIMALS

Record flooding has displaced people and pets from their homes and it will be some time before Central Indiana including Johnson County is back to normal. And while the flooding is beginning to subside, more rain is predicted.

Tax Deductible Donations are being accepted to allow us to help the animals of Johnson County wherever needed. If you would like to help, you may send a donation to HSJC at 3827 N. Graham Rd., Franklin, IN 46131 or donate on line.

The Humane Society of Johnson County is a 501(c)3 not for profit organization that strives to benefit our community by enhancing the companion animal–human bond through education and adoption programs. We are not a government entity. Therefore, we are not a part of Johnson County Animal Control. However, we do work with their shelter on occasion to place the picked–up animals back with their original families or with new homes through our foster program, “Shelter Without Walls.” Please remember, HSJC does not operate a shelter at this time.

We have received so many phone calls from our own members, friends and family that CCG wants to do more to help our neighbors.

With the opportunity of receiving food from Midwest Food Bank, we are now able to offer a food pantry here at CCG.

We are open on Tuesday's from 9am–11am and Wednesday's from 5pm – 7pm. Until we get a good idea of the need, we will allow individuals to pick up once every two weeks.

Food needs this month:

Peanut Butter
Jelly
Canned veggies and fruit
boxes of cereal

If you are able to help in this area please drop off the food during the week at the church office or on Sunday mornings at the Outreach counter.

We also need volunteers. If you are available to help, we need help on the days we are open, as well as other days to help stock the shelves.

Call Kerry Beasley, x259 or by email, if you have any questions regarding helping, or receiving food.

Food, clothing, household items and some furniture available; call Kerry Beasley at 888–6024 Ext. 259 to receive items.

God is good, all the time.
All the time, God is good.
